Though he hoped to plot a path out of chaos, Macron's errors prolong a political crisis in France

Despite having made several appearances during the Olympic Games, Emmanuel Macron stepped back from public life for a long period of his vacation in the south of France during the Games. Since then, having called for a political truce while Paris hosted a spectacular sporting competition, the president hoped to chart a path to exit the autocracy created by his decision to call an early election in the middle of the summer.

Nothing of that sort happened. The Olympic athletes have long since departed, and the traditional rentrée of September is approaching. But no new government is in the works - the longest hiatus since immediately after the second world war - and bitterness reigns. This week, Mr. Macron used his presidential power to disqualify any candidate for prime minister proposed by the New Popular Front (NFP), the left-wing alliance that narrowly won the July election.

This was the final error in a tragicomic series of mistakes. No political formation has a majority in the Assembly, and a minority government from the NFP would have a difficult time surviving for long. But it would have been a more democratically clean result. Instead, it seems that the president hopes to build a complacent coalition leaning to the right; one that, above all, will leave his unpopular reforms intact.

This will not be an easy task. Macron's presidency is now gravely compromised. Humiliated by Marine Le Pen in the European elections of June, he hoped to restore his authority in the legislative elections by surprising the "front republican" with an extreme right. This strategy of rehabilitation was defeated by the unexpected success of the left. For ambitious conservative politicians, the prospect of linking their fortunes to a lame duck still does not seem tempting.

But it is not all about the president and his desires, or at least it should not be. With a combination of tactical subtlety, audacity and technocratic brilliance, Mr. Macron divided and governed French politics since 2017. But, indulging his characteristic desire to remain completely in control of events, even after losing, he is fighting against the interests of the country he leads.

The loss of confidence in politics contributed to the rise of the extreme right across Europe, just as in France. In the face of this scenario, refusing to give the winners of the election at least a chance to forge a consensus is imprudent and myopic. Mr. Macron justified his posture by equating the far left of Jean-Luc Mélenchon (LFI) and the Rassemblement National of Ms Le Pen. But, after repeatedly depending on a broad front republican, including the LFI, to keep Ms Le Pen out of power, this is clearly dishonest.

For the time being, France is in a state of limbo. Ms. Le Pen - whose eyes have always been on the 2027 presidential election - can afford to wait while the conventional political process unfolds. The prospect of government remains remote. The interim prime minister of Macron, Gabriel Attal, is currently working on a provisional budget for the autumn, which he admits could be overturned by his successor. His hubris, once again, has led the president to this situation. A new humility in French politics will be necessary to get France out of this.
